The Lost Sons of Penrycae

Barry Jones

A war memorial history, that remembers the lost sons of Penrycae, soldiers from a small Welsh village.

The War Memorial that remembers the lost sons of Penrycae stands in the heart of this small Welsh village. Paid for by the village and unveiled in 1925. On the war memorial, Barry's uncle Norman is remembered, along with a host of other young men who fought and died so bravely. Barry began to wonder who they were and what their stories were and decided to find out.

This book is the outcome of years of painstaking and meticulous research.

The Lost Sons of Penrycae delves into wartime history, telling the sad and poignant stories of those men who fought so bravely to keep their country free.

“it is a passion for recording the details of a small community at war that drove Barry’s “labour of love”, his book “The Lost Sons of Penrycae”.

-Leader Live

Barry Jones is a proud Welshman.

His family all come from the small village of Penrycae, which sparked the idea for his first book.

Barry was born and educated in Wrexham before going to Manchester University.

He now lives in Bromley, Kent, but maintains strong ties with Wales both as a tenor in the London based Côr Meibion Gwalia (Gwalia male choir) and London Welsh Rugby Club choirs and as a long-suffering Wrexham AFC supporter.
